Wal-Mart names Glenbard North educator teacher of the year

Glenbard North High School industrial technology teacher Dan Weber is tops with his students, and now he is Bloomingdale Wal-Mart's teacher of the year!

On May 9, Wal-Mart manager Rich Borkowski and personnel manager Dee Dee Bojovic surprised Weber in class and presented him with a variety of gifts, including a $1,000 grant for Glenbard North, a $100 gift card for Weber to purchase classroom supplies, a framed copy of a student's nomination letter and a Wal-Mart Teacher of the Year 2007 shirt.

Glenbard North junior Nicholas Pavone nominated Weber for the award. Pavone's nomination letter praises Weber. The letter states, in part, "He took me and has been a mentor even though he does a lot of volunteer work. He stays after school many hours. He is a positive role model. He is hard working, strict, kind and caring. I will always be grateful to this teacher who does so much inside school, but so much for people also outside of school."

Shoppers at the Bloomingdale Wal-Mart will get to know Weber, as his picture will be prominently displayed in the store.

The award, which was presented as part of Wal-Mart's 12th annual Teacher of the Year program, came in observance of National Teacher Day.

The Bloomingdale Wal-Mart is a generous supporter of education and young people. The store donated $2,000 to Glenbard North's post-prom celebration.
