Glenbard Technology Showcase set for April 13

Are you old enough to remember slide rules? Did you ever see the computers that took up whole rooms and required air-cooling? Schools now are using the technology of today to prepare students for the workplace of the future. Come see students demonstrate a variety of applications they use and meet some of their teachers.

On Wednesday, April 13, students from area schools will demonstrate their use of technology in the classroom. The 2005 Glenbard Technology Showcase will take place from 5 to 7:30 p.m. at Glenn Westlake Middle School, 1514 S. Main St., Lombard. Districts presenting include Marquardt School District 15, Queen Bee School District 16, Glen Ellyn School District 41, Lombard Elementary School District 44, Glenbard Township High School District 87, Community Consolidated School District 89, and Community Consolidated School District 93. Parents and other community members will discover the role of new and innovative technologies in the educational process.

In a world where technological advancement is twice as powerful and costs half as much every 18 months [Moore's Law], and bandwidth speed -- the thing that carries all that cyber-information -- triples every year [Law of the Photon], the Illinois Standards for Learning require digital literacy for all students.

Don't miss this unique opportunity for students, staff members, and the community to learn about the diverse uses of technology in our schools.
